

BUCKS COUNTY ELECTION.

JESSE O. THOMAS & SONS,
Jesse O. Thomas, Jr., Joseph S. Thomas,
Jesse O. Thomas, Jr.,
PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1903.

Charlie Towne, of Wall Street fame, dropped business long enough to make a few thrilling campaign remarks. "I believe my soul is in the atmosphere of honest Democracy," announced Mr. Towne. We thought Charlie was betting in all those days.

The North Wales Record was one of those keen Republican newspapers that confidently predicted the re-election of Judge Yerkes. For the first time since the Record has been on our exchange list, it failed to put in an appearance on Saturday—and we were curious, too!

The astounding fact seems to have escaped the attention of the country generally that is the Tammany victory the prediction of the Hon. James K. Jones was fully verified. Speaking of this last victory of Tammany the Kansas City Journal remarks that "the row that is washed returns to her wallow in the mire."

County Chairman Wesley Keeler has been receiving numerous congratulations for the part he played during the campaign. Upon assuming the direction of the Republican forces he faced a task that appeared to be insurmountable, but he never lost his courage and won the day in most triumphant fashion. He won his spurs in the campaign.

Mr. Hanna's post-election statement of his attitude on the question of the presidential nomination should be conclusive to those who have hesitated in putting his name forward for that honor. At a time when the eyes of the country were centered upon him more than any other man, by reason of his overwhelming victory in Ohio, he quietly and positively reiterated his announcement that he would not be a candidate for the presidency.

The report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office just issued shows that during the last fiscal year 22,650,928 acres of public lands were taken up by private individuals. These enormous figures, taken in connection with the current reports of wholesale land stealing in the west should cause the country to call a halt on this rapid disposal of the public domain, especially when it is shown that but little of it goes to create actual homes.

The political horizon in Bucks county has a ruddy Republican glow. The skirmish fight prior to the Presidential contest has been won with every prospect of a sweeping victory next year for Roosevelt and the whole ticket. Next year's county ticket will include candidates for members of the Legislature, Congress, County Treasurer, Register of Wills and minor offices. By selecting the most capable and worthy men for places on the ticket Republican victory will be a foregone conclusion.

Governor Pennington has gone his "greater than Webster or Clay" speech one better by declaring that "in manliness and intelligence and in rare order of ability, there has never been in public life in America Matthew Stanley Quay's equal." Washington, Hamilton, Morris, Lincoln, Stanton, McKinley, Roosevelt, Hay and other eminent figures involved in the building of the nation from the Revolutionary period down to the present through Pennington's phrase, pale into insignificance in comparison to the statesman of Beaver county.

The Doylestown Daily Republican was sold at public sale on Friday and bid in by Harry Wilkinson, of Lakeland, one of the directors of the company. Notwithstanding the widely heralded announcement made by the Democratic organization that the Republican would cease publication after election, the paper has bright prospects of a long and valuable career. The purchase was made by a syndicate of prominent Republicans who will back the institution and inaugurate an active business campaign. We wish our esteemed contemporary a long and prosperous career.

The results of the election throughout the country are most encouraging to the Republicans. Aside from the city of New York, where Tammany gained a big victory, and the State of Maryland, where the party was disrupted, the Republicans landed on the polls with most telling effect. Ohio, under the leadership of Senator Hanna, swept the Democratic party almost out of existence and made a rally of Tom Johnson. In the city of Cleveland, where Johnson was elected mayor by 6000 majority two years ago on Tuesday gave a Republican majority of 8,000. All signs point to a Republican sweep of the country next year when a President will be elected.

One of the principal reasons advanced for the defeat of Judge Yerkes last week is that in the Democratic districts of the upper end of the county the members of the party reversed themselves for the attacks the Judge made upon the Bryanites in 1896. The same conditions prevailed in Lehigh county, the Democratic stronghold where Judge Frank M. Trexler, a Republican, over former Judge Edward Harvey by 1800 majority. The latter bolted his party in 1896 causing a breach which could not be healed, and he was badly defeated by the Republican candidate. Harvey is a Bucks countian, being the son of the late George T. Harvey, of Doylestown.

The great spread of the smallpox epidemic in Philadelphia should be sufficient incentive to the Bristol Board of Health, as well as to similar organizations of other communities to be alert and adopt rigid methods for preventing outbreaks of the contagion. Bristol had a long siege of the scourge which was finally stamped out by universal vaccination, a corps of vaccine physicians visiting every house in the borough and offering free service. Since then many new families have moved into the borough and it would be a wise move of the board to appoint a physician to go into the town in search of persons who have not been recently vaccinated. The cost of quarantining the case of smallpox would be greater than the expense of employing a physician to go upon a preventive mission.

LOCAL NEWS.

Consul Henry D. Saylor, of Pottstown, has presented a caribou head to the President. The caribou was shot in Yukon by an Indian.

Judge Yerkes' last term of criminal court will be held in Doylestown on next Monday, November 16.

The lock tenders on the canal through New Hope have been laid off indefinitely. They have also been notified to vacate the company's houses which they now occupy.

Harry E. Grim, Esq., president of the Perkins School Board, was elected one of the delegates to the State Convention of School Directors by the Bucks county School Directors Association.

The Red Lion Hotel, at Quakertown, has been sold to Benjamin Moore, of Allentown. The consideration was $22,000. Mr. Reinert, the present owner, purchased the property about six months ago for $20,000.

St. Andrew's Roman Catholic church, Newtown, on November 4th, was the scene of a pretty church wedding, when William J. Dunlap, of Roseto, and Miss Anna M. Berry, of Newtown, were united in holy matrimony by the Rev. Father Kloran, pastor.

W. L. Lathrop, of New Hope, was awarded the third class medal and $300 for his picture "Abandoned Quarrel," at this year's Carnegie art exhibit which was opened last Thursday with the eighth celebration of the founding of the Carnegie Institute, in Philadelphia.

Members of the New Century Club are considering the advisability of establishing a free reading room for young men and boys and a sewing school for girls at Newtown. The matter was discussed at length at the meeting Wednesday last week. Definite action is likely to be taken at the meeting to be held Wednesday November 18.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Pennsylvania Association was held in Newtown on Wednesday afternoon, November 4th. George A. Jenks was re-elected president, J. Miles Jamison, secretary and Robert Shields, treasurer. The board of directors was also re-elected.

The McNeal mansion in East Burlington is to be occupied by J. Arthur Hayes and family, who are at present residing in the brick building opposite the foundry. Mr. Hayes is the son of the President of the U. S. Foundry and is an assistant resident manager of the East Burlington plant. His father resides in Buffalo.

J. W. Place & Co., a New York banking firm, in a letter to M. E. Affolbach, of Quakertown, informed him that clients of theirs are looking for a location to establish a plant for the manufacture of pressure and vacuum gauges. Seventy-five hands, chiefly male, would be required, and they would have an "all year job."

Lave Cross, the famous base ball player, accompanied by his wife and baby spent two weeks at the home of Thomas Morgan in Quakertown. Mr. Cross is a lover of hunting as well as base ball, and spent most of his time while at Mr. Morgan's in shooting the rocky hills and glens of the Hacoques in search of birds and squirrels. As an evidence of his skill he seldom returned with an empty game bag.

Four structural ironworkers employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad to remove the framework of the old iron bridge over the Delaware at Morrisville which is to be taken to Washington, D. O., had a narrow escape from death Friday. A section of the structure fell into the water, carrying the men with it. It was with the greatest difficulty that fellow-workmen rescued them. William Hardy was the only one seriously injured, sustaining a fractured arm.

The Trustees of the State Hospital for the Insane at Pottstown on Friday elected Dr. W. H. Bassett, of West Philadelphia, assistant physician in place of Dr. Somers, resigned. An innovation was made in the hospital by the appointment of eleven female nurses in the infirmary. Hitherto no women were employed in the male department. Dr. Mary Wolf reported six cases of typhoid fever and two deaths from the disease. An investigation is under way, the disease being attributed to the milk supply.

The new Quakertown National Bank is now fast assuming a finished appearance. The banking room is being made ready as fast as possible for occupancy. The officers of the bank are completing their organization on Thanksgiving day. The second story rooms are practically finished and three of them have already found occupants. These rooms are commodious, light and neatly furnished, and are in some office apartments. They are heated and lighted and easy of access to the centre of the town and with these facilities they are not likely to be vacant any great length of time. As yet occupants have not been selected.

Irvin E. Barmann, editor of the Schwenksville Item, was appointed County Auditor by Judges Swartz and Wendt to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Perry B. Tyson, of Pottstown, who moved to Philadelphia. The new appointee says it will not be out of place to state here that he was no applicant, never knew that his name was in consideration for the position and that he had no intention of accepting it. This remark suggests that the judges have been somewhat hasty in their selection.

Celebration at George School. At least one thousand persons gathered at George School Friday to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the opening of the institution during the last days of the Old Scholars Association, which forms to be one of the most important organizations connected with the school. This large assembly included the majority of the students who have ever attended George School, former members of the faculty, members of the committee and many others interested in the welfare of the school.

The anniversary was the first one of the school and of great importance so that no expense or labor has been spared to make the visit of the guests as pleasant as possible. Upon their arrival the guests registered, after which committees attended to all their wants. The main building was a perfect mass of all kinds of flowers, plants and evergreens, while artistically draped around the halls was the buff and brown, the school colors.

county, while it is not surprising, it is scarcely reflected by the attitude across the border. He is an able jurist, a gentleman of many splendid traits of character, and for twenty years has been pre-eminently upheld by the people regardless of party lines. But these same people administered a crushing rebuke to their idol on Tuesday. Why? Simply because he insisted upon being the whole thing. Ability, character, and economy in administration matters could not win for him the respect and sympathy of a people whom he insisted on ruling with an iron hand. Twenty years of unspiced egotism, of the most arrogant and to certain degree indifference to the rights and feelings of others. We are not now referring to criminals, but to his equals in every respect except literary attainment and judicial authority. These are the people who removed Judge Yerkes from his high position. Of course the law breakers gladly assented, but it would be a sorry reflection on the Judge's own boast that he had "rid Bucks county of criminals" to now insist that there are still enough law-breakers in Bucks county to accomplish his defeat. No—Judge Yerkes has no control on being indicted and jury, he has no often lectured his people and dwarfed their careers as well as their ambitions, that the pugnacious German and the Quaker joined hands to rid the Court of a common scold. Fortunately, in retiring to private life Judge Yerkes can surround himself with comforts and luxuries, for it is conceded that he is wealthy; and in his retirement he will have time to observe how his neighbors can tell the soil and gather the crops contentedly and without fear of a judicial snuffbox, and appreciate and share the satisfaction of the constituency that has elevated him to preside over the Courts of the Seventh Judicial District.

Why He Was Caught

[Original.]

When Colorado Jack was in prison awaiting execution for his various misdeeds, I, being desirous of interviewing a veritable desperado, got permission of his keeper to visit him. Among other things he told me how he came to be caught at last. This is the story:

I'd had things pretty much my own way for a long while, and it made me careless. It's never best for a man to have a run of good luck. He needs a basket now and then to keep him cautious. While I was holding people up and getting away with the plunder I forgot that those I'd leveled on was stirring up trouble for me.

One day I rode by a ranch and seen it was a prosperous looking place. I thought I'd stop and see if I could haul in anything. The door was opened by as trim a gal as you ever see. Not a plain gal or a growler or anything like that, but a lady all over. I told her I was a traveler and would like to get a dinner if I might be allowed to pay for it, and she said I could have all I wanted to eat with nothing to pay and welcome. I heard an old crane's voice speaking from above.

"What you thinkin' of, Lillian? Of course he can pay for dinner! D'you know we're made of money?"

The gal colored, but said nothing and went out and gave orders to the cook, while I, being convinced that the place was open to me, went upstairs, and, scarin' the old woman by shovin' my weapon agin' her scalp, I axed her what valubles there was in the house. She was a vixen, you bet, and I was afeard I'd have to blow her brains out, but the cold iron and my thinkin' whether to do it or not, which she could see in my face, helped matters, and she at last gave in and showed me where she kept her valubles. It happened that they were all together, so she was 'blessed to show 'em up all at once.

Well, while we was a-talkin' the gal come upstairs, and thought for awhile she couldn't seem to get on to what I was up to, she did at last and gave me a look I'll remember to the day I swing. Somehow it made me feel what I was. Nobody ever made me feel that before.

"Come," she said, "when you've got what you want, I've had what we have in the house set out for you. I'm responsible for your acts, only my word. You asked for a dinner and I intended to give it to you. I shall keep my promise."

She took me downstairs, and there on the table was such a snack as she could get up in a short time, cold beef and bread and butter, eggs and such like, and I set down and eat heartily, for I was hungry. I felt sort of mean, with the gal a-waitin' on me as though she was a servant and I a gentleman, specially as I had all her valubles look up to me. Every time I'd look up the "w" was that innocent face lookin' at me, and when I wanted anything she'd help me to it. So by the time I'd got a good meal into me I was ready to do the only decent thing I ever did in my life.

"You're a nice little gal," I said, "and you've treated me fair. Once I was respectable, and somehow the way you've been actin' toward me and lookin' at me has made me ashamed of myself."

I took out what I'd stuffed in my pockets and put it on the table and got up and walked out of the house and rode away.

Well, that was right enough so far as it went, but it went further. Somehow I couldn't forget the looks of that little gal. It seemed to me that if I could live where I could see her sometimes and have a chance I'd turn decent.

One day when I was near the ranch I rode over there. That was the luckiest visit of my life. I hadn't more 'n rode in through the open gate before the committee that was a-lookin' for me came round a turn in the road, and there I was caught like a rat in a trap.

The only man on the committee that I knewed for shore had gone back with a lame horse, so after they'd taken me in an unexpected they called the little gal—for they knowed I'd been there afore—and axed her if I was the man. She looked at me, makin' believe she was puzzled or couldn't remember or somethin', then said:

"No."

I was that surprised you could 'a' blowed me over with a kitchen bell.

"Never seen him before?" axed one of 'em.

"Not this one. This man is a good fellow. This man, I'm sure, is a good one and wouldn't hurt any one."

That was true so far as I hadn't robbed any one since I was caught.

"All right, stranger," said the leader. "You kin go. I'm sorry to have disturbed you."

I was walkin' forward to the door when I heard a rustlin' on the stairs and the old crane come down just in time to meet me face to face. She gave a shriek, yellin', "Take him. He's the man that robbed us."

Well, I seen at once it was all up with me. They took me in and brought me here for trial, and I'm waitin' for the end of it. What gits me is that the only decent thing I ever did was the thing that got me into trouble. If I'd 'a' tuk the valubles and not got soft hearted I'd probably be roamin' on the road now. I tell you, when a man starts out to be bad he don't never want to turn aside to be good. It'll give him away dead shore.

Good as His Word.

"Have you any five cent stamps?" Inquired the lady.

"No, ma'am," replied the drug clerk absent mindedly. "But we have something here just as good."

"Ha, ha! Force of habit! That's where I caught you!"

"Not at all, ma'am. I can give you two two and a one."—Philadelphia Press.

An Odd Apology.

"This is the classic apology of a celebrated statesman of the last generation," Mr. Speaker, in the heat of debate I stated that the right honorable gentleman opposite was a dishonest and unprincipled adventurer. I have now, in a calmer moment, to state that I am sorry for it."

DOUGLAS

[Original.]

"The day I went to the country I found Marcella much depressed. I was told that Peter Douglas had gone the day before. She said nothing to me about Douglas, and I supposed she was not aware that I knew of his having been there. At any rate, she gave herself away by asking me to play accompaniments for her and insisted on my going to her house."

Oh, won't you come back to me, Douglas, Douglas, tender and true?

I did not mind it at first, but when I found that she could never go to the piano without wanting to see Douglas, I was tired of it. Finally, one day, I went to her house, and found her sitting at the piano, looking more than usually depressed after the invitation to Douglas to come back to her, she—well, she wept; wept with me, an able-bodied, fairly attractive man present to entertain, amuse, interest her. I wished that Douglas would come back and remain long enough in the grounds for me to go out and punch his head.

I finally intimated that this Douglas business was growing tiresome, thinking she would mend her ways. What was my surprise when she sorrowed more for Douglas than ever. Besides, she seemed hurt, if not offended, that I should take so matter of fact a view of what she called "tender associations," and refused to allow me to play the accompaniment again, playing it herself and stumbling at every note.

Something must be done. Two weeks once a year are too short to be spoiled by such nonsense, and I resolved on a stroke. One evening, after she had wailed the usual plaint to Douglas, I went to the piano, and after a few melancholy chords sang:

O Mary dear, departed shade,
Where is thy place of blissful rest?
Sister, thou thy lover lowly laid?
Hearst thou the groans that rend his breast?

I arose from the piano and went and sat in a dark corner for awhile, then rejoined Marcella.

"Don't you think," I said, sighing, "that anniversaries are very sad?"

"Very," she replied, not sympathetically, I thought.

"Nothing more so," I sighed again. "I supposed you to be a bachelor. It appears that you are a widower."

"How did you find that out?"

"By your singing Burns' beautiful lament to his wife so feelingly."

"Am I to consider you a widower because you are pining for Douglas?"

She got up and went into the house. The next day was Saturday, and the usual overflow from the city was expected. Marcella looked troubled.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"Douglas moved farther away?"

She bit her lip. I didn't know then why, but I found out before long. Without any reply she went into the house.

In the afternoon when the express came in the crowd came in with it, and with the crowd who should come but Douglas.

Well, upon my word, and this is "Douglas, tender and true"—a pudgy, fat, knock-kneed little man who stuttered.

I would have supposed that Marcella would have met him. Not so. She did not appear on the piazza, and at dinner time had a headache. The next morning I saw her trying to steal through the hall to get away to the woods, but Douglas was waiting for her, and I saw him approach with the air of an old friend, if nothing more. Marcella, who saw that I was a witness to the meeting, blushed violently, made a few incoherent replies to his tender remarks and a dash for cover. Douglas looked puzzled.

There was little seen of Marcella the Monday after Douglas had departed on the early morning train. The same evening she sat in an obscure corner of the parlor with a novel. I went to the piano and sang—

Won't you come back to me, Douglas, Douglas, tender and true?

I sang the whole song over twice, then walked out on to the piazza. It wasn't long before I heard a few number chords, followed by—

O Mary dear, departed shade,
Where is thy place of blissful rest?

I couldn't understand what had led the girl to play such a game. I went to a good friend of mine, a married woman, of mature years and with a knowledge of the world, told her of the episode and asked her opinion.

"She undertook to get you," was the reply.

"How?"

"By playing the man Douglas off on you."

"Do you think that a high grade way of getting a husband?"

"You men can't be reached by any high grade means. Women have to give you what you are fitted for."

"Do you mean to say that I could be won by any such ignoble means?"

"Of course you can and are. You're in love with Marcella—so plainly in love that everybody in the house has noticed it."

I went out and joined Marcella. "Douglas coming back soon?" I asked.

"He is coming back with Mary."

"Oh, perhaps it will be as well in order to avoid embarrassments that before they come we should have an understanding. It will save disappointment, remark and all unpleasantness. Will you take a stroll?"

A few days later when I announced to my mentor that Marcella and I were engaged she replied:

"She played that very well. Without the Douglas incentive it never could have been done in two weeks, possibly not in months."

The most absurd part of it all is that I rejoice in having been caught even in so contemptible a trap.

Whistler and Darnell.

Whistler once came very near to pointing a portrait of Darnell. He had the commission. He went down to the country where Darnell was, but the great man did not manage to get into the mood. Whistler went away disappointed, and shortly afterward took place a meeting in Whitehall which was the occasion of a well known story. Darnell put his name in Whistler's for a little way on the street, bringing from the artist the exclamation, "If only my creditors could see!"
